UCLA Community- Engaged Pedagogy Workshops

All events will be held in Powell 186 from noon to 1:15. Lunch will be provided.

Are you interested in exploring new dimensions of community-engaged pedagogy — connecting your teaching with community issues, assets and needs in a way that enhances your students' learning and benefits community partners? Whether you're experienced or a newcomer to this pedagogy, join us for lunch to meet colleagues and contribute your perspective in this new workshop series.

Multiple Models for Community-Engaged Teaching | October 23, 2019

Community-engaged pedagogy is an approach that seeks to create reciprocal value for the learner and the community. Faculty in many disciplines have embraced this pedagogy in creative ways in a wide range of courses. In this session, you'll hear from colleagues to illustrate various models for this community-engaged teaching and learning: client/consulting, co-learning, research, and direct service approaches. You'll also learn about the new draft framework for community-engaged teaching under review by the Undergraduate Council.

Panelists:

Andy Atkeson, Economics
Jenny Jay, Civil and Environmental Engineering
Lauri Mattenson, Writing Program
Carla Suhr, Spanish and Portuguese
Moderator, Shalom Staub,

Community Partner Perspectives | November 21, 2019

Successful community-engaged courses are built on the foundation of strong community partnerships. Faculty learn about the partner organization's work, its resources and its needs, and then work with community partners to identify appropriate student work which both meets an organizational need and creates authentic opportunities for engaging course content. This session's panel looks at this dynamic from the community partner's perspective, and offers faculty the benefit of multiple perspectives from experienced community partners.
